

In the kitchen, powder-coated pendant lamps play off the room's calming pastels and shimmering backsplash.

A walk through the space is a journey from muted understatement to noticeable prints and back again—punctuated by advice from the enthusiastic West, her native Texas drawl reinvigorated after six years back home. Guests enter the traditional Craftsman by way of the living room, which is anchored by a large, '70s-style sectional reupholstered in a bold pattern. (“Go big or go home!” is one design principle West adamantly espouses.) She adorned the common room with pretty floral drapes and left the walls white—because giving the eye a rest is also important, she explains. The adjacent kitchen continues the soft neutral theme, with cabinets and barstools painted duck egg green and inset appliances that seamlessly blend in. The breakfast nook chairs are covered in a fabric featuring a native bird of Australia: “The Australian prime minister and I have the same print!” West says, laughing.

Small spaces are where she really brings the drama: A hall closet is painted Yellowcake from Farrow & Ball (“A nice zinger in a house filled with pastels”), and the kids’ bathroom showcases a whimsical botanical wallpaper that balances cabinets painted in Arsenic, a modern, moody mint also from Farrow & Ball. In the mudroom, West applied big-print cobalt wallpaper and added contrasting lilac cabinets, because “laundry rooms need to be a little happy.” Everywhere she points out “something sweet, something graphic, something old, and something new—I layer those elements throughout.”

West is also particularly proud of the back house, a sharply angled, custom hemlock wood addition the couple built and stained black, where her husband works and her in-laws stay when they visit from England for several weeks a year. The structure abuts the pool, a favorite hangout in the summer for everything from throwing breakfast taco parties to enjoying evening dips with poolside margaritas. “We surround ourselves with positive, creative, forward-thinking people,” says West of the family’s Austin community. “And a lot of vitamin D.”
